

The map illustrates the administrative divisions of the newly formed Czech Republic in 1918, based on historical borders and the distribution of the German population. The provinces shown are:

- Německé Čechy (29. 10. 1918): Located in the northwest, including areas around Děčín, Ústí n. Lab., and Most.
- Sudetská země (29. 10. 1918): Located in the northeast, including areas around Olomouc, Opava, and Ostrava.
- Župa Český les (3. 11. 1918): Located in the southwest, including areas around Vimperk and Český Krumlov.
- Německá jižní Morava (3. 11. 1918): Located in the south, including areas around Jihlava, Znojmo, and Brno.

The map also shows the location of Prague (PRAHA) and other major cities. A legend in the top right corner explains the symbols used: blue lines for historical borders, red lines for demarcation lines, hatched areas for German-populated regions, and red squares and circles for provincial centers and cities to be annexed by Austria, respectively. A scale bar at the bottom left indicates distances up to 100 km.
